Rarely do radical styling exercises, shown at the world's most prestigious car shows, become reality which can actually be driven. More often than not, the concept of original prototypes are either forgotten and gather dust in that particular designer's shed, or the original design will be watered down so much by the time the car reaches production that they only show a distant resemblance to the prototype.

Not so with this fantastic machine. First shown at the 1988 Turin Motor Show, Italdesign's Aztec not only still looks radical 20 years on but was actually built as a working car and can be legally driven on the road!
