With a wide network of Porsche tuners having sprung up by the late seventies, customers could have practically any modification made to their 911. Firms like DP and Kremer were doing a roaring trade building high performance specials with trick engines and custom 935-inspired bodywork. Eventually, Porsche latched onto the idea of offering their best customers bespoke cars and established the Sonderwunsch programme at the Zuffenhausen repair department. From 1981, relatively small numbers of 911's were transformed with the new Flachtbau bodywork, this Special Wish option starting out as a modification primarily for Turbo customers. The 40,000 DM upgrade practically doubled the Turbo's price, but the Flachtbau conversion was a truly spectacular machine with its sloping 935-style front wings a
