Combining the traditional Aston Martin virtues of style and performance with the delights of open air motoring, the DB4 Convertible is today a most sought after and highly prized motor car. With the exception of the Zagato, the DB4 Convertible is arguably the rarest of all the David Brown Aston Martin road cars with just 70 built in total, five fewer than the legendary DB4 GT. This 1962 example is one of a mere 30 built in the DB4's penultimate Series IV generation.

Until the convertible's arrival in September 1961, the DB4 had been available only in closed form. Announced in 1958, it was the British Grand Tourer par excellence, an all new 140mph coupé that combined the stylistic talents of the Italian Touring company a
