Early Ferraris have always carried a certain aura and been rightly held in the highest regard. The combination of rugged, race proven mechanicals often clothed in the most graceful and stylish open or closed bodywork of the period created by the most famous Italian styling houses has ensured that they have remained amongst the most desirable motor cars of all time.

In 1951, Ferrari manufactured many different chassis including the 166, the 195 and its replacement, the 212. While the top of the range was represented by the 4.1-litre, 340 America, Ferrari also sold the 212 chassis as a customer race car. The race car was officially s
