Introduced by Porsche in 1976 as a competition development of the 911 Turbo, the 935 was to evolve out of all recognition and, along the way, acquire an entirely new engine. Even in fairly basic form, this 911 derivative won most of the rounds of the World Championship of Makes securing the title for the Stuttgart firm. Until the advent of the Group C era in 1982, the 935 was the main weapon in Porsche's competition car armoury, the model winning the majority of World Championship races and securing the title for Porsche every season except 1981. Much the same was true across the Atlantic in IMSA.

This very successful hillclimb racing Porsche (2nd. in the German championship) boasts 750 hp, Porsche 935shk001, 964 with
