

CLASSIC DRIVER

Video access all areas...

05 May 2005 | Classic Driver

For the ultimate in personal pampering, C.P. Hart has launched the Aquavision television - a TV designed for wet environments.

Complete with a waterproof remote control, this fully functional TV has heated screen technology so that it doesn't steam up when in use. Available in 10.4" and 15" in conventional formats and 17" and 23" in wide screen formats this means that you need not miss any football match, favourite soap or films while you soak away the stresses of modern day living.

For music fans, the company also sells the Feonic® audio system. Utilising technology that was originally designed for the US Navy, the Feonic® audio system has two 30mm x 30mm cylinders that can be concealed and wired to a hi-fi system to transform any glass surface into a loudspeaker. Attach these to your shower door and amazingly you will have surround sound while you shower.

Managing Director of C.P. Hart, Paul Rowland, says: "Technology is developing at such a rate, especially in the bathroom. Accordingly, we have launched some highly innovative, stylish yet imminently practical products that further enhance the luxury of your bathroom. Our aim is to be recognised as the ultimate supplier of cutting edge bathrooms and accessories that offer the end user something different."

The biggest size of Aquavision costs around 3.600 Euro. More information can be found at www.cphart.co.uk.

Text/Photos: C.P. Hart

ClassicInside - The Classic Driver Newsletter

Free Subscription!

<https://www.classicdriver.com/en/article/video-access-all-areas>

© Classic Driver. All rights reserved.