163 bhp, 998 cc four-cylinder engine.

MV Agusta went out of business in 1977, as the Japanese manufacturers dominated both racing and the street market. But the Cagiva brothers, who had rescued Ducati, bought the company in the 1990s and launched a new DOHC four-cylinder, the F4S 750 in 1999. Handsome and light and designed by Massimo Tamburini, who came up with the Ducati 916, the 750S benefited from additional power in 2003 in the form of the F4 S 1000S. The motorcycle rewards an aggressive owner with a true superbike experience on open twisty roads. With 163 horsepower and a top speed in excess of 170 mph, it is perhaps not intended for novices, so the wise buyer will start out with some track days to figure out where his or her edge lies.

This exciting superbike is offered in perfect original condition wi
