Despite having a lower profile than its main rival Harley-Davidson, American motorcycle manufacturer Indian produced equally desirable motorcycles for many decades, indeed many argue that Indian produced the superior machine. Its first model, the Single of 1904, established the company's reputation for sophisticated design and excellent quality, and Indians soon proved highly effective in competition. By the 1920s these fast and stylish bikes had attracted a strong and loyal following.

The motorcycle offered here is one of the few remaining Indian Scouts which has been rebuilt some 10 years ago by its fastidious owner using only original parts. Having been used sparingly during his ownership and always serviced as it s
