Footnote:

In June 1997 Aston Martin unveiled a unique DB7 derivative that had been produced for Alfred Dunhill, the leading British company specialising in men's clothing and a range of luxury goods including writing implements, lighters, timepieces and fragrances. The car used design cues from many Alfred Dunhill products for the instruments, the interior appointments, various fittings and the exterior finish; in particular, elements of the 'Millennium' range of watches and the 'AD 2000' pen collection which were being launched later that year. Its exclusive luxury appointments included a humidior to contain fine cigars; a set of carbon fibre pens; a silver cigar cutter; a cigar lighter and a

Dunhill Millennium watch set into the centre console. Special platinum metallic paintwork was chosen for the exterior and also for the wheels, the centres
