The Eldorado, part of the Cadillac line from 1953 to 2002, was the longest running American personal luxury car and the only one sold after the 1998 model year. Its main competitors included the Lincoln Mark Series and the lower-priced Buick Riviera. Although cars bearing the name varied considerably in body style and mechanical layout during this long period, the Eldorado models were always near the top of the Cadillac line. An Eldorado convertible would remain in the Cadillac range through 1966, but its differences from the rest of the line were generally modest. In 1964, probably the most distinctive year during this period, the main visual cue indicating an Eldorado was simply the lack of fender skirts. Radically redesigned for 1967, the Eldorado was intended for the burgeoning persona
