Positioned up-market from the Fiat, the Bianchina debuted as the Transformabile coupe, with full length folding sunroof. The Bianchina showed clear signs of American influence, its size excepted, exemplified by two-tone paintwork, whitewall tyres and chromework. In 1960 the newly introduced and more powerful Fiat 500D engine became standard equipment on the Bianchina range which was augmented by two new models: a Cabriolet and the Panoramica estate car that used the Fiat Giardiniera's space-saving horizontally-opposed engine. A fourth version, the Quattroposti saloon, arrived the following year.

One of only 1050 ever built, the example we are offering here today is a charming 1961 model, which the vendor describes as being in good overall condition after a recent restoration. Fitted with its o
