In the late Eighties Porsche finally realised that they could not kill the 911 model such was the demand and so they began an intensive development programme. Thus in early 1990 the 964 series was born representing a major evolutionary step with 85% of the car being new. Porsche wanted a quieter, more powerful engine that was suitable for use in all world markets. The result was the Type M64/01, fitted with a new flat six engine with ceramic cylinder head liners and a lightweight crankshaft. As a result, displacement was now 3.6 litres exactly, and output rose to 250bhp at 6100rpm.

The model featured power steering, anti lock brakes, revised suspension, and I
