The MG K-Type Magnette was produced by the MG Car Company from October 1932 to 1934.

Launched at the 1932 London Motor Show, the K-Type replaced the F-Type Magna but having at first a slightly smaller capacity engine it took the name Magnette. The chassis was similar to the Magna but strengthened and had the track increased by 6 inches (150 mm) to 48 inches (1200 mm) and was available in two lengths with a wheelbase of either 94 inches (2388 mm) or 108 inches (2743 mm).

After the Morris Company had taken over MG in the mid-1930s and closed the racing department, it was left to the private owners to carry the flag against the challenge from such specialist marques as ERA. Consequentl
