Cisitalia was founded in 1946 in Turin, Italy by Piero Dusio, a wealthy industrialist and former professional athlete, who had a passion for amateur car racing. After the end of the War he organized the company to build race cars using mainly Fiat parts.

The first cars built were monoposto racing cars named the D46 which enjoyed some initial success and became the basis for the company's successful model, the 202 road car.

Cisitalia went on to develop a mid-engined, four-wheel drive formula one car, designed by Ferry Porsche. This used a 1.5-litre flat-12 supercharged engine with 450bhp! This project, along with other
