Designed as a race car although driven by private owners, the Maserati MC12 Corsa is a derivative of the MC12 GT1, the legendary race car which won the FIA GT Manufacturers' Championship in 2005. The MC12 Corsa was developed in mid-2006 "in response to the customer demand to own the MC12 racing car and fuelled by the growth in track days, where owners can drive their cars at high speeds in the safety of a race track", as stated by Edward Butler, General Manager for Maserati in Australia and New Zealand. Maserati is responsible for the upkeep and maintenance of the cars, and they are only driven on specially organised "track days"
