

CLASSIC DRIVER

The patina on this Ferrari 500 Mondial had our photographer smitten

05 November 2015 | Alex Easthope

When our photographer Rémi Dargegen went along to shoot this Ferrari 500 Mondial for RM Sotheby's, he was mesmerised by the car and its beguiling patina...

Set to go under the hammer at the RM Sotheby's Driven by Disruption sale in New York next month, this Scaglietti-bodied Ferrari 500 Mondial is, according to the auction house, perhaps one of the most original Ferrari Barchettas in existence. Interestingly, the car was re-sprayed in red by the factory in 1955, the remnants of which are still vaguely visible.

Spellbound

It wore this colour until 2007 when, realising the importance of originality, its new owner commissioned an Italian body shop to delicately remove the top layer of paint, in order to reveal the car's fascinating French Blue original paintwork. The patina is truly spellbinding, as Rémi's intricate shots document. In fact, for this particular photographer it was a dream come true, given his affinity for detail shots. See for yourself how this was 'the car that kept on giving'.

Photos: Rémi Dargegen courtesy of RM Sotheby's © 2015

<https://www.classicdriver.com/en/article/cars/patina-ferrari-500-mondial-had-our-photographer-smitten>

© Classic Driver. All rights reserved.