Montblanc's first smartwatch is a timeless marriage of past and present

16 March 2017 | James Bannister

Despite technology constantly moving forward, the true design greats of yesteryear will always be desired. By combining the best of both periods, Montblanc has created a smartwatch even the most committed vintage fan would wear on their wrist...

Don't forget your roots

Fully loaded with the latest and greatest software, the Montblanc Summit runs Google's latest Android Wear operating system, displayed through a high-contrast touch screen and, in a first for smartwatches, is covered by curved sapphire glass, further adding to the classic aesthetic of this techno-timepiece. From monitoring your workout to ordering your Uber to translating your coffee order while in a foreign country, the Summit is a classy companion for navigating day-to-day life, all housed in a 46mm case, with a traditional face inspired by the 1858 collection. With bespoke customisation options available, this digital wonder is sure to catch admiring glances from watch and technology fans alike and stand out amongst other smartwatches as a traditionally beautiful, cutting-edge smartwatch for the discerning watch wearer.
