Haven't we all dreamed about an Universo Ferrari?

06 July 2019 | Alex Easthope

September is going to be a bit of a special month for diehard Ferrari collectors and enthusiasts – the marque has revealed that it will hold an event in its hometown of Maranello entitled Universo Ferrari, open to both its most loyal customers and public visitors from around the world...

If you're one of the countless people around the world who bleeds Rosso Corsa, you might want to book a trip to Italy in September. Universo Ferrari is essentially an event in Maranello situated inside a vast purpose-built structure that will showcase the breadth of the Prancing Horse's current activities, from its motorsport endeavours in Formula 1 and the World Endurance Championship and its flourishing Classiche historic division to its ultra-exclusive Corse Clienti programmes and, of course, its current line-up of exquisite road cars. Of particular interest, we imagine, will be the chance to get up close and personal with the new SF90 Stradale, Ferrari's first series-production plug-in hybrid that's quicker than the LaFerrari. In quintessentially Italian style, further details about Universo Ferrari are few and far between, but we'll be sure to keep you posted right here on Classic Driver when they emerge. In the meantime, Forza Ferrari!
