

CLASSIC DRIVER

Keep the Urus clean and hit the dirt with this Lamborghini Gallardo instead

Lead

We have to admit, we've not seen a wild Lamborghini Urus anywhere but in Central London. And that's fine - those with a complex about getting their Raging Bulls dirty can venture out of the capital with this purpose-built Gallardo off-roader instead...

When the going gets rough, V10

Nope, this isn't a leftover prop from a forthcoming Mad Max film. It is, however, a 2004 Lamborghini Gallardo E-gear that's been extensively modified to cope with the kind of antics that wouldn't feel out of place in said films. The suspension's been raised dramatically, lending the car a hilariously tall silhouette, while a heavy-duty rack has been fitted to the roof along with a spare wheel and a high-intensity LED lightbar. Inside, it's somewhat disappointingly business as usual - where are the bucket seats, roll bar and dash-level handbrake? For the style-conscious zombie apocalypse survivor, this is the car for you. And even if the waves of undead monsters do catch you up in the end, at least you looked and sounded great trying to get away.

Photos: Classic Youngtimers Consultancy

Gallery

