The 600 Multipla was produced by Fiat between 1956 and 1967. The first minivan seen on the market, a concept that will be taken up by all the car manufacturers in the world, but with a delay of about 30 years. Fiat needed to create a car both for family use and functional as a small van, be versatile and go from 6 seats for a large family or a comfortable two-seater with ample interior space.

The multiple 600 was a commercial success with 243,000 units produced and purchased by large families, taxi drivers, artisans, messengers and nuns of the general houses. In addition, it was ahead of its time by 30 years, anticipating with its shapes what, starting from the 90s, became a veritable station wagon trend.

A car featured in magazine advertisements where, like a diva, it appeared frequently, and which immediately became the object of desire of the Italians, who they used to invest in their dreams even at the cost of paying some bills at the end of the month.

It was the somewhat naive but honest and determined Italy that, after the horror of the war, was also trying to leave again on board a FIAT 600 Multipla: much more than a car.
