Bentley's return to motorsport is something to celebrate. This Bentley GT3R is the street legal brother of the GT3 track car that debuted in 2013 during the Gulf 12 Hours of Abu Dhabi. At first glance it is immediately apparent that this is not a "normal" Bentley, you can see the green-black striping and an indispensable spoiler on the tailgate. The interior also clearly shows that it is a GT3R, for example, the door panels and dashboard are completely made of carbon, and the seats have a green trim. These are clear features of the GT3R version.

In the front is the well-known 4.0L V8 that has been modified so that it now delivers 580 hp as opposed to the regular 528 hp, and delivers 700nm of torque at just 1,700 rpm. The power of this car is beautifully matched by the eight-speed ZF gearbox that has shortened ratios. As a result, this heavy sloop shoots from 0 to 100 in 3.8 seconds.

The colossus has also become less heavy. I say less heavy for a reason... This Bentley is 100 kg lighter than the regular Continental GT. This is partly due to a titanium exhaust that not only saves 7 kg of weight, but also ensures an even better engine sound. Despite all the weight savings, the car still weighs a staggering 2,195kg. It won't be a lightweight anytime soon.

Limited edition of 300 units.
